The United Nation's Economic Commission for Africa is supporting African coverage of proceedings at the third Global Knowledge Partnership, held in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia.

Ten Highway Africa News reporters hailing from South Africa, Uganda, Kenya, Zambia, Seychelles and Senegal will produce daily wire copy for a Special HANA GKP digest to be distributed to over 1600 subscribers.

Articles are edited by Big Issue, Kenya editor Zachary Ochieng. "Uneca's support is important as not many international media agencies and ICT reporters are present at GKP3," said Ochieng. "Uneca's support of Hana is a clear indication of its commitment to enable Africa to achieve its the Millenium Development Goals through use of ICTs."

A Highway Africa News blog provides a colorful, polemical and multimedia view of the conference and some of its key sessions.

Rhodes New Media's Jude Mathurine acts as multimedia editor for the blog and Hana.

"Our approach is distinctly African," says Jude Mathurine. "Our mission is to highlight pan-African perspectives, initiatives, profiles and perceptions of the Information Society."

Highway Blog offers insight and comment that would ordinarily be frowned upon in a wire report. Diaries, lists, interviews, random musings, photos, videos and some multimedia magic can be expected daily between 10-13 December.
