

Optimizing mining relationships via a proactive policy approach

Many African countries have achieved breakthroughs in fostering public participation during legislative processes and in the broadening of the maneuver margin of communities and civil society organizations. However, much still has to be done to implement existing laws, ensure the accountability of institutions and, more broadly, protect human and labor rights.

Improvement of State and institutional capacity to draft and implement policies and regulations remains a permanent challenge.

